

Little Lek Longtail Learns to Sleep

by Bette Killion
illustrated by Beatriz Vidal

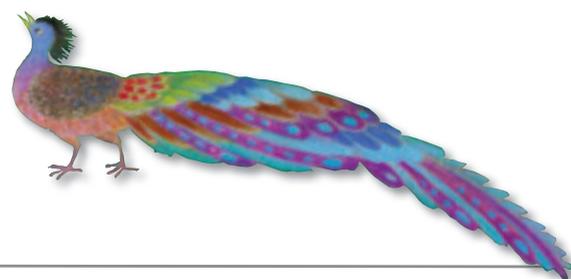

“I can’t sleep, mommy, I’m scared.” Human moms and dads have heard it many times before, and so too, it turns out, has Little Lek’s mother. Her little Thai Argus pheasant was so gentle, kind, and handsome with his exceptionally long and brightly colored tail. But he had just one problem: he couldn’t get to sleep. Then one day something changed, and Little Lek discovered a strength that lay hidden within, something that gave him the peace of mind to sleep soundly through the night.

SELECTIONS FROM THE BOOK

He was a beautiful bird with an unusually long and brightly colored tail. It was the longest and most colorful of any pheasant! His proud mother named him "Little Lek Longtail."

Sample Pages

When he walked among the forest creatures he was so kind and thoughtful that everyone loved him. He made friends with all the other birds—the kingfishers, parakeets, and blue-backed broadbills.

As Lek grew, his tail grew longer, brighter, and more beautiful. Lek was proud of his tail. He strutted about the forest, sailing it out behind him. The other animals all watched him in awe.
